The Daughter of War: Zero Hour (Volume 1) Mr Matthew Treadstone

Ellen Rilus grew up in an era of peace, unaware her mind and body had been designed for war. Her homeworld, Tecora, has enjoyed six centuries of isolation and prosperity. Born into wealth, the daughter of Tecora's most militant defender, Ibrahim Rilus, Ellen spent her first sixteen years of life barely aware of the storm brewing around her. The Sons of Santiago ready to lead an effort to wrest control of Tecora from Ellen's people. Progenitors of an ancient martial line that once threatened the galaxy, the Sons want Tecora as a foundation to embark on their renewed plan of empire. The power of the Sons rests in the passed on memories of their ancestors, building up skills and recalling experiences through an advanced nervous system. An incident in her school soon shows that Ellen has this dark seed within her as well, when she nearly kills a boy attacking her brother, Herod. The incident forces Ibrahim to reveal to Ellen and the rest of his family that he had found a way to replicate the modifications to the Sons of Santiago, and secretly applied them to Ellen before she was born. The shock of this revelation tears their family apart and leaves Ellen to question the nature of who she actually is. Time doesn't allow her to complete this personal journey. The Sons arrive to claim their destiny. Worse still, for Ellen, the Generalissimo of the Sons, Alonso Sera de Campagnes de la Espada, learns of her secret. He sends his warriors, among them the savage Britannicus Muaria de la Muerta, to capture or kill her at any cost. Ellen's only hope of escape lies in using what she fears is within her, but she just might get the help of an even more ancient power from outside the influence of the entire affair. A force that has origins not dissimilar to her own.
